

Emily Katherine Camposano is a third year part time undergraduate student at the University of Regina majoring in Psychology through the Faculty of Arts. She is also an Early Childhood Educator. Supported by her family, she opened a licensed Group Home Childcare with the Ministry of Education, providing high quality care and education programs. Shortly after starting her business she enrolled in the University of Regina to pursue a career in Psychology, interests are in Child Psychology, Developmental Psychology, and Cognitive Behaviour Therapy. She is a candidate for the position Constituency Director of Part Time Students. As a part time student herself, she understands the endeavours in balancing education with work, family, and other unexpected responsibilities.

Emily's business in Childcare and ongoing education in Psychology commonly have interest in supporting the community. When a childcare supports the needs of the children, it supports their families and supports the community they work and interact within. She had joined the Psychology Students' Association as an Events Committee member 2020-2021, further developing her set of skills and providing her with the opportunity to extend support to the University community, who she recognizes have been a support to her. She is driven to support the community in its growth and development through opportunities she can help provide.

As someone who has been studying part time at the University, Emily is seizing this opportunity to support students in their academic journey, having experienced first-hand that not all academic paths are alike.
